It's time to close this case down. Always, always, antitrust should be viewed through the eyes of the consumer. We consumers were never prevented from obtaining other software or browsers.

In fact, I still use Netscape as my first choice. I use Qualcomm's Eudora for my email. I continue to use Corel's WordPerfect over MS's Word. I use MS Windows rather than Linex. That's my choice and I'm free to do so. Microsoft's bundling may make it more convenient initially to use their products, but they've never prevented me from using another's.

Fear of and actual lawsuits only reduce the number of enterprising businesses to emerge. Let go of the marketplace and let us decide the winners at the cash registers.
